Augh, it's like that put-the-cup-on-the-stick game that I can't do in real life, ever.

IT TOTALLY STINKS.

 ace cub reportr, of course, is rocking it. And we don't even talk about the Wabbit.

I'm torn between wanting to send the link to everybody I know, in the hopes that they'll all be rotten too, and the sure and certain knowledge that I'll be the only one who stinks on ice. Sigh.

But, yanno, the people who are good at it aren't getting any work done! So there's that.

If it makes you feel any better, you're not the only one who stinks on ice trying to work that thing. I tried a few times, then gave it up as hazardous to my blood pressure.

If it doesn't make you feel any better, you're still not the only one who stinks on ice trying to work that thing; you just don't feel any better knowing that.

Me, too. At least I can manage to hit the penguin once in a while. This one I can't do at all. And I am capable of occasionally getting the ball in the cup once in a while. Or, I used to be, when I was a kid. We won't discuss how long ago that was. *g*

If you make it hang from the corner, you can dart in from the side to click it. Sometimes.

This is evil. I hate it, hate it, hate it.

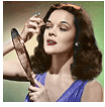

By which I mean that I totally love it, I'm just horribly frustrated by it, to the point of wanting to curse at it in Spanish every time I miss and yell in wild victory when I manage to change the color.

Goodbye, productivity.

I managed to click it once, but I think it was a fluke. (controlled bounce straight up was the tactic that sorta worked for me)

The Cowboy wandered in after lunch and said, "It would be even cooler if it bounced off the sides of the box."

You don't think he expects me to write the code, do you?

After poking at it some more, here's what was working for me.

Flick as straight upward as possible so the ball peaks about where the mouse started or maybe a little below, then click on the natural recoil.

For a while I thought the ball was getting smaller each time I clicked it, but that must have been a hallucination. Be a nice feature to make it progressively harder, though. Ms. Wabbit, wanna write that while you're implementing the bouncy walls? ;-)

I don't have a mouse but a trackball.

And now I have a sore thumb as well...

Thank you
